Ill Cuſtoms by Degrees to Habits riſe,
Ill Habits ſoon become exalted Vice. Dryden.

SIR,

IN the two laſt we have ſufficiently ſhown our Deſign of Meddling, in this you have more of the Proceedings of our Club, and we intend to let no Vice eſcape our cenſure, whether 'tis heeded or not. — The Vice that was debated on this Evening, altho' 'tis plain to the whole Town, yet 'tis ſo little minded, or elſe ſo cuſtomary that 'tis unobſerved to be one, is the Vice of the Bay.

— Says Dick Haughty, I can't help taking Notice of the great Concourſe of People of both Sexes that aſſembles on the Bay almoſt every Evening: And I think as we are Meddlers, that that is a Topic worthy our Obſervation; for in my Opinion, it is a Cuſtom that will never reſound to the Honour of Carolina, and tends to promote Vice and Irreligion in many Degrees. And tho' it may be objected that the Heat of the Climate will not permit them to walk in the Day, and it can't but conduce to their Health to walk and take the air; yet I think there are many more fitting places to walk on than the Bay: For have we not many fine Greens near the Town much better accommodated for Air, than a Place which continually has all the nauſeous Smells of Tarr, Pitch, Brimſtone &c. and what not, and where every Jack Tarr has the Liberty to view & remark the moſt celebrated Beauties of Charles-Town, and where beſides (if any Air is) there's ſuch a continual Duſt, that I ſhould think it were enough to deter any Lady from appearing, leaſt her Organs of perſpiration ſhould be ſtopt, and ſhe be ſuffocated.

Your Obſervation is right, reply'd Will Genirous, for I have heard that in Great Britain the Ladies and Gentlemen chooſe the Parks and ſuch like Places to walk and take the Air in, but I never heard of any Place's making uſe of the Wharfs for ſuch Purpoſe, except this, and in my humble Opinion I think the Greens a much better Place than the Bay.

Beſides, ſays Ralph Hippo, Salt-Water Air does not agree with chaſt and virtuous Minds, for 'tis notorious that Sea-faring Men are more venerial than others, and I believe it has the ſame effect on ———

Hold, ſays Bob Careleſs, Did you never hear that the Antients defined Venus to be Sea-born, and it plainly appears that their Definition was juſt, ſince the moſt of her Votaries in Charles Town make their Victories in the ſight of the Sea, and her miſchievous Son Cupid has ſhot more Darts on the Bay than in all Carolina; beſides 'tis there that little Elf trumphs, and 'tis there he wounded me, and I have juſt reaſon to complain, ſince the Fair is inexorable and otherwiſe employ'd; for

Cupid, I hear, has got two Darts,
With which he pierces Lovers hearts,
The one of Gold which cauſes Love,
The other Lead dire Hate does move.

and he has ſhot his Leaden one at her, and his Golden one at me ———

I ſhall only add, ſays Tom Snigger, that I have heard it ſaid, that moſt Women love Sea-faring Men better than Land-Men, and who knows but moſt that appear there do it with a deſign to pick up a Sea-ſpark, ſince they have all unanimouſly agreed that the Bay muſt be the happy Place of their Walks, and altho' Night has no Eyes, yet the Ladies Eyes will give Light enough to diſtinguiſh who is a Seaman, and who is not.

It being my Turn next, I told them I concurred in all their Opinions, and would add ſomething of my own, tho' I thought it dangerous to meddle with the Fair Sex, yet ſince it was the Will of the Club, I ſhould think myſelf unworthy of the Honour of being a Meddler, if I did not my Endeavours as well as the reſt, and I think as the Text ſays, that an ill Cuſtom may ſoon breed an ill Habit, &c. For ſhould one of thoſe illuſtrious Fair Ones happen to be ſingled out by one who was no better than a common Jack Tarr, but ſhould have borrowed ſome finer Cloathes, and ſhould pretend to be a Gentleman, and tho' of ſo ſhort an Acquaintance as two or three Evenings, after promiſing the Fair One Marriage, ſhould find her pliant, deſire her to walk a little further in private, and there perform what I dare not name,

The willing Fair ſhe ſoon conſents,
Till marks appear, ſhe then repents.

What a Scandal is here brought upon her Friends, if ſhe has any! and a Diſgrace to herſelf as long as ſhe lives; and all this occaſion'd by the Vice of the Bay. I would not have the Ladies cruel, but I would have them be cautious with whom they deal with, and not be too fond and obliging to Strangers, whilſt our perhaps more deſerving Caroliniant lay neglected. If the foregoing have any effects upon this Vice, we have our End and Aim, if not, we have done our Duty as Meddlers, and ſo ſhall reſt contented on that head. ——— If you ſee fit to give this a Place in your Gazette, you will oblige

Your Friends and humble Servants the Meddlers.
Sign'd Jack wou'd be taller.

To the Printer.

SIR,

If you ſhould inſert the following youthful Eſſay in one of the Gazettes, beſides the pleaſure 't would give the Author to view himſelf in Print, I am bold to ſay 't would be very kindly accepted by ſome of your Readers, and would be thought perhaps not to be the ſilliеſt thing that ever you were pleaſed to think well of.

I am &c.

The 6 firſt Verſes of the 137th Pſalm paraphras'd.

WHen on the banks of Babel's rolling flood
We ſat and wept our Country and our God,
From burſting hearts the heavy ſorrows riſe,
And vent the burthens at our ſwimming eyes.
Our harps (whoſe muſick now was uſeleſs grown,
No help to real grief, no eaſement to our moan)
We careleſs hung, neglected, uſeleſs thing;
Sorrow has ſpoil'd the ſound of every ſtring!
No more gay airs, nor ſofteſt tunes ſhall breathe
By ſad and ſilent, as the caves of death.

These

There they our Conquerors, in inſulting mood,
Would have profan'd our harps, our ſongs, our God,
To ſooth their impious mirth. But ſacred ſongs,
(Such as were ſung in Zion,) to our God belongs.
Nor ſhall be proſtituted to the mirth,
Of the mad vulgar (Sordid ſons of Earth)
How ſhall we to ſuch foes preſume to ſing?
Foes to our God, our country, & our king.
The ſong wou'd faint, upon the impious wire
Would looſe it's ſelf and all it's ſacred fire
And be forever baniſh'd from the heavenly quire
No, no, dear Salem no, our zeal for thee
Shall laſting as ourſelves & ſuffrings be.
Yea, ſhould our hearts but waver from the theme
And on ſome gay and pleaſing object dream
With ſacred rage we'd ſcourge the rover back,
A ſevenfold mourner for dear Zion's ſake.
Or ſhould our tongue, or ſhould our harp eſſay
Another theme than Zion's mourn'd decay,
Then let our ſacrilegious harp and tongue
Never attempt to ſing another ſong.

On Saturday laſt died here Capt. Anthony Mathews, an eminent Merchant & Settler of this Province, who by his Induſtry, Frugality & Improvement in Mercantil Affairs, acquired one of the greateſt Eſtates in this Country He firſt arrived in this Province about the Year 1680.
